During the times that I spent in the company of Ms. Juanita Jones in the neighborhood, I recall her as being an open-minded, honest lady with a straightforward attitude and positive outlook on life. A free spirit as free as the "wind". I emphasize the wind because she could change direction in a heartbeat. If I had to characterize her in a few words they would be: "what you see is what you get." In my early years when I engaged in adult conversations with Juanita, I believed that I thought fast and spoke faster than most people; however on occasions when she suggested ideas, explaining the possibilities or solutions to problems her active mind was on overdrive. I had to step up the pace to keep up with her.

I didn't take long to discover her stubborn streak when it came to debating the difference of opinions. Albeit if right about something she would object with firmness and if proven wrong, ("real proof that is"), she would yield graciously. Juanita put logic and objectivity before emotions in her way of thinking. To know and understand Juanita Jones you would need to be an open-minded person with positive regard for everyone. In celebration of the homegoing of departed friends or family, what always comes to mind is the legacy they leave behind; not of the material but of the spiritual and emotional food for thought. Such as the spirit of not personalizing differences of opinions, living and letting live, coexisting are some of the lessons that she showed by example that have enhanced my life and certainly the lives of others. Ms. Juanita Jones has truly left a legacy of Love and Respect. It is my hope that this legacy lives on in the hearts of all of her family and friends. With a warm embrace to both Karlton and Jean. Be guided and be blessed.

With my deepest condolences.
